The meeting held at the Chamber of Commerce yesterday, the result of which is and nounced by an advertistment in these columns to-day, has, we are inclined to believe, in augurated a new era in the public life of this colony. Public opinion in Hougkong! has for some time just been growing more Overture, and more vigorous and outspoken. Theifference to public affairs was natural to the merchants of Hongkong when the colony was first formed. This community was then much smaller than it is now, composed of dants, and the Government of the island was too small and humble an institution to excite their attention. A man does not necessarily become a vestryman of Pimlico parish bebave become utterly metamorphosed.
